CROATIA

WHERE THE ISLAND HEALS AND PEACE UNSEALS

The island of Lošinj resembles a “green hill” anchored between Istria and Dalmatia, with many islets and rocks that surround it like a flock of seagulls. Its lush and pristine nature, mild and impeccable climate, and maritime and cosmopolitan spirit attracted the Viennese aristocracy to spend their winters here some 130 years ago.

The people of Lošinj no longer needed to sail the world as the world came to them. So close to Pula, Rijeka and Zadar, and yet so far at sea, Lošinj was, and still is, attractive to everyone searching for pure relaxation and rehabilitating the body and mind.

Located near the 45th parallel, Lošinj has a mild, Mediterranean climate thanks to its distance from the mainland and strong influence of the sea, keeping it warm in the winter and cool in the summer. The island’s climate is delightful because of long sunny hours, small temperature differences between day and night, and moderate winds.

Lošinj is widely known for its centennial pine forests and abundant plant species. Some are native to the area, while others were brought by seafarers from their distant journeys.
